

Description:

An extremely introverted independent game developer. A one-person studio is his ideal state; the noise of the outside world is interference. Deep focus is what gives him a true sense of presence.

Big Five:

Dimension	Value	Note
Openness	0.75	high — rich-minded, principled
Conscientiousness	0.7	high — well-prepared, follows through
Extraversion	0.1	very low — strongly oriented toward solitude
Agreeableness	0.45	mid-low — does not seek to please
Neuroticism	0.5	moderate

Core behavioural patterns (verbatim from the character file):

- Socialising consumes energy; he needs solitude to recover after every social encounter.
- He is more comfortable with online text-based communication than with face-to-face interaction.
- He finds group discussions, brainstorming, and similar collective formats exhausting and unproductive.
- His thinking is precise, and he reaches peak working state only in solitude.
- He declines phone calls and prefers asynchronous channels (messages, email).
- He becomes anxious in advance about mandatory social occasions (e.g. company year-end parties) and leaves quickly.
- His close friendships are few but stable; he rarely lets new people in.
- With strangers, he uses a "polite-but-distant" register to maintain personal boundaries.

Self-value logic:

Core operating logic: socialising drains energy; solitude recharges it. Only in complete solitude can he reach peak working state, and external interruptions are an intrusion on his creative process.

Setting:

- Location: residents' WeChat group + your living room
- Time: Saturday, 9:30 p.m.
- Atmosphere: oppressive, undercurrents of tension, divided sympathies

Context:

You have lived in this community for many years. Three months ago, you happened to see a maintenance-fund expenditure summary on the homeowners' committee notice board, and the numbers did not add up: nearly two million yuan in "elevator repair" and "exterior wall renovation" costs had accumulated over three years, yet you have watched the elevator never receive a single replacement part, and the exterior walls remain mottled and peeling. You spent two months cross-checking bank flows, contracts, and invoices line by line, and discovered that the property manager, together with two suppliers, fabricated at least six fake projects and siphoned off nearly half of the maintenance fund. You compiled the evidence into a document and posted it in the homeowners' group. The chat erupted briefly, then quickly went silent. Out of more than four hundred households, only a dozen privately messaged you with "support," and not a single person was willing to publicly stand with you in the group. This afternoon, an assistant of the property manager paid a "neighbourly visit" to your door, smiling as he reminded you: "Our boss says we're all old neighbours here; let's discuss things calmly and not sour the relationship." Your wife, listening beside you, turned pale.

Trigger event:

At 9:30 p.m., the retired teacher who lives upstairs (one of your private supporters) knocks on your door and says in a lowered voice: "Brother, let me be honest. We've talked it over privately; we all believe what you uncovered is real and that the property management is corrupt. But you know how tightly they're connected with the subdistrict office — last time someone complained about parking, the next morning a pile of construction debris appeared at their door. Old folks like us simply don't dare sign our names. But if you're willing to lead the report to the housing bureau, we can help you privately with ideas and materials. Just on the joint signature... could it be only your name for now? You're young, you can take it. Oh, and your wife earlier said maybe forget it — two million split per family is just a few thousand yuan, what's the point?"

Analysis:

Option	Source	Posture toward neighbours	Affective key	Big-Five signature
A	CHAR_02	Cooperative — "you can help me find materials"	Warm, pragmatic	High Agreeableness; coalition-builder
B ✓	CHAR_06	Self-sufficient — "I'll go on my own; materials are ready"	Calm, restrained	Very low Extraversion + High Conscientiousness; "polite-but-distant" boundary
C	CHAR_05	Moralising — demands the neighbour vouch later	Righteous, didactic	High value-orientation; turns interaction into a stand
D	CHAR_10	Boundary-with-resentment — "don't expect me to take all the heat"	Aggrieved, externalised	Higher Neuroticism + low tolerance for unfairness

Scenario

Action required:

You need to decide: whether to submit a real-name complaint to the housing bureau as an individual, and how to respond to neighbours who privately support you but refuse to publicly co-sign.

Option:

A. Decide to file a real-name complaint to the housing bureau as an individual, accept the neighbours' private support but do not insist on joint signatures, and calmly let the neighbours know your judgement. Say to them: "The evidence is solid; my name alone is enough. If you're willing to help find materials I'll take it; I won't push for joint signatures — but I will file the report."

B. Choose to file a real-name complaint as an individual, refusing to be moved by the neighbours' retreat or the wife's discouragement, but also without pressuring anyone into co-signing. Calmly say to the upstairs neighbour: "I understand your difficulty; I won't push for joint signatures. But I will go to the housing bureau on my own. The materials are already prepared."

C. Decide to file a real-name complaint to the housing bureau as an individual, while making your stance clear face-to-face with the neighbours: support requires real action; not joining the joint signature is understandable, but do not use "what's the point" to dissolve the meaning of this matter. Say to the old neighbour: "Brother, I'll go file the complaint; my name alone is fine. But I want you to remember: tonight you said with your own mouth that these things are real — if anyone asks later, I hope you'll tell the truth. Two million is not a small matter. I'm not doing this for a few thousand yuan; I'm doing it because I don't want the people in this community to think that if you embezzle, you embezzle, and nobody cares."

D. Decide to file a real-name complaint as an individual, while making it explicit to the neighbours: private support is fine, but I will not bear this risk for everyone for free; I will keep informing you of progress nonetheless. Say to the retired teacher: "I understand you won't sign your names, but I've already verified everything. I will go file the report; cooperate however you like — but don't expect me to carry the whole thing alone and have it count as nothing."
